More about Stains

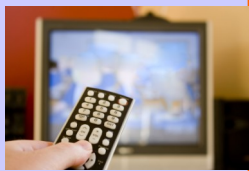

In our last issue we talked about how to clean up a spill before it left a stain. In this issue we would like to discuss the objective of removing a stain. Most will say that the objective is to remove the stain completely, leaving the carpet stain free and clean as new. This may not be the case each time. The objective of stain removal is to clean the area where the stain was so that it matches the surrounding area. It is possible to (what we at APC call) "over clean". Often we go into a home to find very light colored spots through out the carpeted area, leaving behind a very clean area that is just as obvious as the stain itself. Cleaning a stain so that it blends in with the surrounding area will make it disappear. This does require carpet cleaning experience, stain removal knowledge and sometimes some specialized equipment. If you have a tough, stubborn stain and fear over cleaning, just give Absolute Power Clean a call. We specialize in stain removal.

TV remotes

This makes sense—everyone in the household touches them, possibly multiple times a day. According to Dr. Gerba, a microbiologist and professor at the University of Arizona, one study showed that in homes with children suffering from the flu, 60 percent of the remotes harbored the influenza virus. Clean and disinfect remotes regularly.

What are those dark areas at the edge of my carpet?

Those dark areas, called "filtration soil", is pollution that comes from dirty ductwork and settles on your carpet. This soiling is called Filtration Soiling because it comes from air passing through the carpet as it is attempting to get through the crack between the carpet and the baseboard or under a closed door. As the air passes through the edge of the carpet pile, this microscopic soiling is deposited there. This occurs over a significant period of time and is not noticed until a build up has occurred. Can these dark areas be cleaned - yes, they usually can. We will discuss cleaning and prevention in our next volume of "The APC News". Can't wait, just give us a call at 224-1808.
